Take a look around this gallery and find the four paintings that go together as part of the same story. These paintings show scenes from the story of the young sorceress Armida, who finds the knight Rinaldo asleep and falls in love with him. After she leads him away to a magical garden, Rinaldo’s friends appear to take him back to the army, reminding him of his responsibilities as a knight.

• Which four paintings go together? How can you tell?
• Put the paintings in the correct sequence or order to tell the story.

Gallery 263

This painting shows a lively nightclub in the Chicago neighborhood of Bronzeville. Although the painting is crowded with people talking and dancing, the artist left space for you, the viewer.

Find the empty space and imagine that you could jump into the scene and become a part of it.

- Who would you meet?
- What would you hear?
- What title would you give to the story in this painting?

A Seasoned Story

Gallery 155

In ancient Greece, stories were often told to explain events in nature, such as the change in seasons. This dish tells part of the story of Persephone, who lived in the underworld for a part of each year. Her mother, Demeter, missed her daughter so much that she cast a dreary winter on the world. So every year, when Persephone returned from the underworld on a chariot, she brought the beautiful season of spring.

Find these characters from Greek stories by looking closely for the objects they wear or hold.

- Hermes, the messenger god, wears winged shoes.
- Artemis, the goddess of the hunt, holds two spears.
