Pride for Seventh Annual Traveling Scholarship Donated by Mr. E. G. Elcock
On the Threshold of the Exhibition

In these days of restless energy, we are apt to become too much engrossed in our own individual affairs. Concentrated energy is a wonderfully fine thing if it keeps in touch with all the agencies working about it and is influenced by them. And he whose task it is to design the shelters for his fellow-men above all should be on the alert, feeling, as it were, constantly the pulse of his patients, and determining to the best of his ability the architectural diet and medicines best suited to his clients’ condition. A thousand puzzling questions arise in the treatment of each case, and no two cases are alike. How often do we of the architectural profession fail to realize that we can be a tremendous factor in shaping the lives of those for whom we build. The form and color we give to our structures may be instrumental in awakening the beholder’s interest, or leaving him indifferent, in stimulating him to energy or inviting him to rest. The opportunities and possibilities for doing the right or the wrong thing are without limit.

We must feel the drift and tendencies of our times; helping them along if they be good, diverting them from the dangerous path if they be bad. Architects must be leaders, but should not forget that at the same time they are more or less servants to the wants and tastes of the public.

Once a year we have the opportunity to see how our fellow-workers have solved the many problems confronting them. There are not only photographs, but also the first sketches showing the original conception. We see the different ways in which each individual studied the problem.
We are apt to overlook the splendid opportunities such an exhibition offers us for advancement, and for bringing us into closer touch with our fellow-workers.

In visiting an exhibition it is natural to compare and criticise. But of what nature should this criticism be? A celebrated French painter said the best way to study a work of art was to look for its meaning, for the underlying idea, and for its good points first of all; the bad points would reveal themselves without being searched for. If this spirit guides us, our enjoyment will be keen, and the profit to ourselves great; it will give us new ideas and new courage for our daily tasks.

Let us enter the doors in a spirit of good fellowship and friendliness, and may the general public, too, be sympathetic, generous, and charitable, then in truth will it be a success, this our Twentieth Annual Exhibition.
